research.

1966 to 1969. Attorney-Arbitrator, Peace Corps, Washington, D.C.

Not to be confused with being a Peace Corps volunteer, this position was part of the foreign service personnel system of the State Department. Started as a Foreign Service Reserve Office Grade 5, Step 4 and finished as Grade 3, Step 1. Held top secret clearance and worked on Peace Corps legislative program; legal problems of Peace Corps operations in Latin America; review of security investigations, and worked in co-operative program with United Auto Workers for mechanics in Guinea.

1969 to 1984. Partner (after 1971) in the law firm of Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, an international law firm which currently has over 1000 lawyers in sixteen offices in the United States and seven foreign countries. Includes 1979 to 1980 in the Jones, Day Washington, D.C. office.

"Now the second largest law firm in the world." American Lawyer Magazine (April, 1986)

Principal work at Jones, Day was as a labor partner. Handled collective bargaining negotiations; labor arbitrations; National Labor Relations Board cases, both unfair labor practice and representation; unemployment compensation hearings; federal trial court cases, including Boys Market injunctions, damages for breach of contract, Title VII and Age Discrimination Act; state trial court cases, including injunction and breach of contract; federal appellate cases, including arguments before the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

In the course of Jones, Day partnership, worked for General Motors, Manville, Carnation, North American Coal, Republic Steel, J & L Steel, TRW, Westinghouse, Midland-Ross, Curtiss-Wright, Hanna Mining, and many smaller companies.
